Dear Director Poole,

As you are aware, the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) issued a 66-page toolkit to encourage and help states rebalance long-term care offerings for people with disabilities to favor home and community-based services over large institutions. We urge the state of New York to take immediate action on these guidelines. As the COVID-19 pandemic surges, we need to quickly transition nearly 20,000 New Yorkers with disabilities out of crowded, congregate settings to protect their lives.

It has been more than 20 years since the U.S. Supreme Court's historic ruling in Olmstead v. L.C. that found unjustified segregation of persons with disabilities constitutes discrimination in violation of title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). But today, on the 30th anniversary of the ADA, fewer than 15 states have abolished state-funded large facilities in favor of community-based programs.

South Carolina is unfortunately not among them. The state is also guilty of placing many individuals with disabilities under 64 years old in crowded and vulnerable nursing homes. In South Carolina, approximately 670 persons with disabilities remain in state-run or state-contracted institutions, while approximately 2,650 are housed in nursing homes.

For the past 30 years, the disability community has raised concerns about the warehousing of people with disabilities in large institutions or nursing homes, as opposed to community-based housing programs. Now these crowded, outdated forms of care are literally costing lives among a population particularly vulnerable to the pandemic. Here in South Carolina, 230 staff and residents at one state-run facility were infected with COVID-19, the largest raw number at any nursing home or assisted living facility

The nonprofit FAIR Health in November released a report finding that people with intellectual and developmental disabilities are three times more likely to die of COVID-19. Prior to that report, an adjunct professor at Syracuse University issued a similar report finding that pandemic mortality rates for the developmentally disabled was 16% in New York and 14% in Pennsylvania, compared to 8% among the general population.

However, we in the disability community believe that mortality and infection rates likely are much higher than these reports. Data through most state health departments is inconsistent or nonexistent. This lack of information prompted U.S. Senators Elizabeth Warren (D-MA), Patty Murray (D-WA) and Margaret Wood Hassan (D-NH) to write a letter to CMS requesting that it issue guidance for mandatory comprehensive data collection and reporting on congregate care settings to better understand and address the impact of COVID-19 on people with disabilities and older Americans in these settings.

What we can say with confidence is that community-based settings are much safer for people with disabilities as the pandemic surges. Of the nearly 4,100 people in the care of Community Options nationwide, only seven have passed away due to COVID-19, or .0017 percent of the people we support.

It is time for states to finally abandon the practice of warehousing people with disabilities. We urge the state of South Carolina to act promptly on the guidelines provided in the CMS digital toolkit to protect the lives of 3,300 South Carolinians with disabilities. For their sake and their families and loved ones, we cannot afford further delays.

We are happy to provide any information or assistance we can in this effort.

Sincerely,

Robert Stack
